Othello Rising: The Hunt for the Harvard Student Boston Strangler and Zodiac Suspect Hank Brewster

In 1962 a wave of Strangling Murders would begin. By 1964 the man who would confess was behind bars. There are some who claim that he was not responsible for all 13 murders. There are others who claim the man who confessed was Tutored by the real Stranglers of the first and second phase of murders. This second man would be a suspect by all those psychiatrists he came into contact with. It wouldn't be till later that he would also be looked at by the authorities as a suspect in the Beverly Samans Stabbing for actually dating the victim. By then, they had their man and need look no further. This man would soon find himself in Michigan, among several new murders and again he would become a suspect. What if this man was in fact guilty of at least some of the murders in both states? He would also be in and out of California around most of the times of the famed Zodiac Killings, since he was not known, he was never a suspect. This same man was living in San Francisco at the time of the Santa Rosa Hitchhiker Murders; sailing the West Coast of California during the years of the Original Night Stalker Murders and in Hawaii around the time of the Honolulu Strangler Murders. What if he never stopped killing, and only when among other serial killers as he moved from state to state? Never caught, and never suspected after Michigan. Behold Othello Rising!
