When senior politician Jon Chandler is called upon to represent the Union's First Minister at the accession conference on distant Phoenix he has no option other than to travel by TranzCon. But he has a problem, with his rare mind type it's difficult to find hosts, especially at short notice. Difficult but not impossible. When the eminently suitable candidate the company selected for him is killed in a bizarre ritual murder he's desperate to find another. But who? Time is running out and Jon's political career hangs in the balance. Just when all seems to be lost a new host turns up, Miss Jana Kell (aged 22). Jon is horrified at the thought of swapping bodies with a female, but he knows that unless makes a success of this mission he'll be clearing his desk next morning. Anyway, it's only until the weekend, and what could possibly go wrong? But things do go wrong. The beam which carries interstellar communications fails leaving Jon's mind stranded on Phoenix in Jana's body. After a week there's still hope it will be back on line any day soon. As weeks turn into months the hopes Jon once had begin to fade. With a vindictive policeman chasing the temporary occupant of the body for a crime his host committed Jon is in a fix. One outcome is he'll be sent to jail for years, the other is he'll be locked up in the secure wing of a mental hospital, possibly for the rest of his host body's life. In desperation he stows away on the Hyperion, a star-liner once owned by the shipping company he set up over 30 years ago. If he can get to the planet Darius he'll be able to TranzCon home from there and resume his high-flying career. But even after two long years in space things still don't turn out as Jon had hoped. The news he receives is devastating. And at that stage there's still another 100 pages to go and I don't want to spoil the rest of the story for you.
