Forget everything you know. Forget your name, your family, your boyfriend, even your face in the mirror. Now couple that confusion with terrifying flashbacks—or are they hallucinations—of things you've never done or seen.

Welcome to my haunting reality.

My name is Braidan, and I'm seventeen years old. I wake every day with no memories. Only a series of sticky notes hint at the life I supposedly lead, but unease in my gut says this isn't right. This isn't my true identity. All the clues I've left for myself say to search for answers. But how will that work when I'll forget everything the moment my mind drifts to sleep?

Ian, the new boy at school, claims the key to my walking coma lies in the hands of a scientific corporation. A corporation which wants nothing more than to see me never remember who I am. If what he says is true, I'm far more than just a girl with amnesia, and I've got precious little time to unlock my past and escape the destiny they've planned for me.

Pieces of Me depend on it.
