A Howling in the Woods Velda Johnston

A howling In the Woods. A long mournful howl of a dog at night. Hints of the strange death of a child. A town encircled by a wall of hate that an outsider could breach only at his own peril. Lisa had come to the little Nevada town a stranger, unprepared for the puzzling hostility of the local people. Only the handsome manager of the hotel Lisa had inherited from her uncle was cordial, but even he could not give her the reason for the undercurrent of tragedy, the unspoken threats. Then, when it was almost too late Lisa found out who her enemy was. Here is a fascinating blend of mystery, terror, and romance.
