Gary Gunderson has opened a window of unprecedented opportunity for professional and lay leaders of all faith traditions to utilize the eight major strengths of congregations in ways that empower innovative ministries of healing and transformation. His exciting vision and practical plan are more than simply one brilliant clergyperson's reflections. They have been tested and refined by the author in the exciting Intefaitth Health Program of the Carter Center, in many parts of our nation. All this makes the book must reading for all seminarians, all clergy, and lay leaders of religious institutions. If you long for the church to become a more imaginative, courageous, and effective enabler of healing and well-being in personal and societal life, this is the book for you.
