Actress Gemma Norwood and professional baseball player Adam Hudson are thrown together four years after a gut-wrenching break-up. Far away from the glitter of Hollywood and the trappings that accompany a high-profile, major league star, they meet in the small Catskills town where they first fell in love. Adam, sidelined by an injury that's left him questioning whether he can continue to play, longs to return to the sport he loves and Gemma, weary of small roles in low-budget films, isn't sure if her heart still lies in making movies. After one kiss, rekindling their relationship is all that matters. But as the start of baseball season draws near, a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for Gemma threatens to tear them apart again. The warm glow of a happily-ever-after seems as impossible as starting a fire in a snowstorm. Fans of small-town romance, winter tales with heat and heart, sports, and second chances will love this reunited lovers novella.
